GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY MONTANA STATION INDEX

Compilation by Dale Jones © 2005

This index of Great Northern Railway stations and sidings is a compilation of three official railroad sources to assist researchers in defining more accurately where and when certain locations along the Great Northern line in the state of Montana existed.

To create an overall picture of the history of these locations, I chose a very early source, which was the Great Northern 1911 Public timetable that sets the names in pretty much the “original” configuration of stations after most of the branchlines were built. The 1935 GN Public timetable helps clarify the locations when all the branchlines were completed but also after abandonment of the British Columbia lines. The 1950 Official List of Stations gives the most easily recognized configuration of stations and sidings from 1950 until when the Great Northern Railway ceased to exist in 1970.

This index has nearly 1,000 entries and I have tried to faithfully adhere to any variance in spellings, mileposts or miles between station points from what was copied in the printed sources. Many of the mileposts have two mileages, one from east[north] and west[south], so it should be helpful in pinpointing locations to a reasonable accuracy. The online version of the document has this list alphabetical by station or siding name and also a list alphabetical by nearest city which will be valuable when researching a particular location.

Please feel free to use the information collected in this document for your own research, as I hope that it will be beneficial in assisting you in discovering more about the history of Montana transportation. If you use the information in this document for any publication [for pay or otherwise], I would appreciate an unpaid written acknowledgement as source material.
